A.I.D. COMMODITY CODE BOOK - EFFECTIVE JULY 1, 1963

I N T R O D U C T I O N

The commodity codes in the AID Commodity Code Book were based on the 5-digit codes used in the January 1, 1958, edition of Schedule B, "Statistical Classification of Domestic and Foreign Commodities Exported from the United States."

Since American exporters use the current Schedule B extensively to prepare export declaration documents, AID has revised this Commodity Code Book, effective July 1, 1963, to take into account the changes reflected in Schedule B as revised by the Public Bulletins issued to date, and to make certain other changes requested by AID offices.

This code book contains a list of 106 groups into which all food, agricultural, and industrial commodities, as well as services and transportation costs, may be classified. The groups are identified by 3-digit numbers on the left-hand side of the description. Under each commodity group there appear brief descriptive titles which indicate the types of commodities included in the group. Each of these titles is identified on the left-hand side of the page by a 4-digit AID code number and on the right-hand side of the page by one or more 5-digit numbers. These 5-digit numbers are the commodity code numbers which identify the commodities as described in the Schedule B, January 1, 1958 edition, as revised.

It is the intent of the commodity list to enable the users to identify uniformly commodities in terms of AID 4-digit numbers. In order to do this, it is recommended that each user obtain a copy of the above-mentioned Schedule B directly from the U.S. Government Printing Office in Washington, D. C. With the aid of the Schedule B-AID Code Cross-Reference List, included in this booklet, the 5-digit numbers may easily be converted to the appropriate AID Commodity Codes. (See page 16.)

The Commodity Code Book is intended to insure a common understanding among AID offices, recipient countries, suppliers and prospective suppliers, persons or organizations charged with making payments under procurement authorizations, and persons or organizations interested in the commodity composition of AID programs, as to the coverage of each AID commodity group.

Requests for additional copies, and other inquiries regarding this AID Commodity Code Book should be addressed to the Statistics and Reports Division, Agency for International Development, Washington 25, D. C. Since there may be amendments to the Code Book in the future to accommodate further changes, make sure your name is on our distribution list to receive copies of such amendments as they are issued.

SPECIAL NOTES ON A.I.D. COMMODITY CLASSIFICATION*

1. Each separate commodity group, with the exception of certain "basket" codes provided for user convenience, is mutually exclusive.

   This principle is important to any classification system whether it be a classification of birds or traffic accidents or commodities. The user of any system of commodity classification has a right to expect that any particular commodity will be classified in only one place in the system. We have attempted to follow this principle in AID commodity coding.

2. The classifications established are all-inclusive. The AID classification attempts to provide for every commodity which AID is willing to finance.

3. Each AID commodity classification is specifically and definitely limited to the equivalent Schedule B commodity codes to which the AID code is related and which are provided in the AID Code Book opposite the AID code. In general, the AID system of commodity classification is much less detailed than in Schedule B, so that oftentimes a whole series of Schedule B codes are equivalent to only one AID code number.

   In consulting Schedule B, it is important to note that Schedule B includes not only the generic descriptions of the commodities, which are the basis of the classifications, but also in many cases specific brand names and trade names, which may vary even from one part of the United States to another, and in some cases may not be the familiar or customary names of the products abroad. It is important to bear in mind that these listings in Schedule B are only illustrative; they are not an essential part of the classification; they are printed as a convenience and an accommodation to provide guidance to clerks and other nontechnical persons involved in making out Shipper's Export Declarations, since these persons may have available to them on invoices or commercial papers only the trade or brand names.

   The listings of individual items and trade names included under a given Schedule B classification are not necessarily complete or exhaustive; they represent for the most part, only those items which have at some time been exported in some value. It is impossible to list or anticipate every commodity or item that now appears or will appear in U.S. trade. Sound judgment should be used to classify those items not specifically listed, according to composition, and usage, following the classification of the current Schedule B. If no classification can be located which specifically includes the item by name, it should be classified under the most specific one of the classes for the material of which it is made which does not specifically exclude it.

Adapted from the phamplet "The 1958 Revision of Schedule B," originally prepared by the Bureau of the Census for the Industry Advisory Committees.*

SPECIAL NOTES ON A.I.D. COMMODITY CLASSIFICATION - Contd

The classification is based primarily on the basis of the material of which the product is made, or which is the chief weight, or in some cases the chief value of the product (wood, metal, etc.), and on the structural or functional form of the product (raw cotton versus textiles, etc.) at the stage it is financed by AID. In a relatively few cases, the classification is based on the use to which the product is to be put.

Although this principle of classifying commodities on the basis of their condition when financed by AID occasionally works some hardship in its application to commodities purchased offshore where end-use classifications may be more prevalent, it is far easier for most U.S. suppliers than if the AID system were based primarily on end-use, since this would be inconsistent with the Schedule B classification which the supplier already has followed in preparing his export declaration. The reason for this is obvious. The U.S. exporter, bank or AID voucher examiner may not know the use to which the commodity is to be put after it reaches the foreign country and therefore cannot provide the information required to classify export shipments into use classifications.

The classification attempts to reflect normal trade practices particularly with respect to customary groupings of spares, accessories, and parts wherever possible.

The principle stated above is one of the important objectives of Schedule B, on which the AID code is based. An illustration of this principle is provided in connection with automobiles and tires financed by AID. Automobiles for export normally are equipped with a spare tire. This normal "spare" is included in the cost of the vehicle and the entire transaction is classified with Motor Vehicles, Engines, and Parts. The classification for tires is used only for exports of tires as such and not for tires exported as spares accompanying an automobile. In this case the commercial practice is well-known; in some other cases the commercial practice is not well-known, is inconsistent from supplier to supplier, or varies in other countries.

COMMODITY ELIGIBILITY

The listing of a commodity in the AID Commodity Code Book does not necessarily imply that such commodity is eligible for AID financing. USAIDs provide guidance to cooperating countries regarding eligibility of commodities. The cooperating countries, in turn, review and control AID-financed commodity procurement by their importers to assure that AID policy on commodity eligibility is met. Suppliers comply with any special instructions in purchase orders, letters of credit, or other documents pertaining to commodities that may be furnished. Inquiries regarding eligibility for AID financing of any specific commodity may be addressed to "Agency for International Development, Washington 25, D.C. Attention: Office of Material Resources."

Examples: Tongue depressors, rubber tubing, retorts, chemicals, bunsen burners, surgical cotton, etc. This code has been established to simplify coding operations. Its use should be limited to situations where procurement for an approved project or by an end user laboratory, hospital, clinic, or school calls for relatively small quantities and values of numerous separately codable items not exceeding $10,000 in total. Code 8811 should not be used to cover commodities imported for resale nor for quantities of items under any given code having an estimated value of $5,000 or more.
